Philippines Service Project

University students from Sydney and Brisbane spent part of their summer in the town of Clarin on the Philippine island of Bohol. During their stay they helped alleviate structural and educational damage resulting from a recent earthquake.

Faith and Freedom in Vietnam

Four decades after the Communist suppression of the Catholic Church, Xavier Symons travelled with 14 high school boys to Vietnam on a service project. The boys all attend Nairana Study Centre, a centre of Opus Dei in Sydney.

To Fiji, in the wake of Cyclone Evan

A service project, organized by students from New Zealand and Australia, became a lot more challenging than originally planned.

Students help rebuild cyclone damaged Vuaki

In 2012 twenty-two Australians and New Zealanders travelled to the small village of Vuaki in the Yasawa island group of Fiji to lend a hand after a severe cyclone destroyed several buildings and homes.

India through different eyes

Tamara Elizabeth shares her experiences during a service project in India during January 2010.

Australian and New Zealand students refurbish school in Fiji

In July 2006 a team of young men from Australia and New Zealand travelled to the Fijian village of Navunibitu to carry out urgent maintenance and painting in a school. The project was an annual “workcamp” organized by Warrane College. The pastoral care of Warrane College, a university residence of UNSW, is entrusted to Opus Dei.

Dubbo Service Project

For the fourth year in a row, Creston College's service project allowed twenty students from the Universities of New South Wales, Sydney and Technology the opportunity to touch some hearts – both young and old – in the western NSW town of Dubbo.
