Four years ago the idea arose of preparing some articles on the topic of the family and education.

The goal of these articles, which are now being published as an eBook, has simply been to highlight some aspects that seem essential in the make-up of the person and the first human relationship among persons: the family.

Educating is above passing on a way of living. It is giving shape to a person's life, much more than teaching or instructing, although without overlooking the latter.

The articles have deliberately been written in an “open” style to help parents and educators “rethink” their marvelous task of education, which embraces every aspect of the human person.

Many of the reflections found here owe a big debt to the wise and loving “pedagogy” of Saint Josemaría Escrivá de Balaguer. His spiritual experience has yielded rich fruit not only for the fields of theology and law, but also for more practical, “sapiential” fields, including education.
