Prelate ordains 31 new priests from 13 countries

“Go out of yourselves in order to think only of those souls who will be entrusted to your pastoral care,” Bishop Javier Echevarría said in his homily to the new priests.

ROME. Msgr. Javier Echevarría, prelate of Opus Dei, ordained 31 new priests of the Prelature on Saturday, 4 May 2013, at the Basilica of San Eugenio in Rome.

“And this should not be, because the priest is a mediator between God and men, through Jesus Christ, so that divine grace can give life to all,” he added.

Msgr. Echevarría also referred to those words St. Josemaría had written on the occasion of the priestly ordination of faithful of Opus Dei: “they are ordained in order to serve, not to command, not to stand out, but to give themselves totally to the service of all souls, in divine unceasing silence.”

The bishop said that the priest’s task as mediator “is of a greatness that is compatible with our personal littleness. Our Lord grants us these gifts so that we may be capable of guiding souls to eternal life.”

Addressing those attending the ordination ceremony he asked: “Let us petition with Saint Josemaria, the grace for all priests to carry out holy things in a holy manner; for us to reflect in our lives the marvellous grandeur of our Lord. A good way to achieve this is to love the Sacred Host more and more each day.”

Anthony Pichay Sepulveda, 29, graduate of Philippine Science High School and Ateneo de Manila University, was one of the youngest in the group ordained.

The complete list of the new priests follows: Julio Paz (Argentina), Peter
